Roman Pessarov is a Bulgarian aspiring producer and director who has been working for Nu Boyana Film Studios since 2016. He also co-founded the videography company Plonj, in 2017.

As part of Nu Boyana, Roman has worked as a cinematographer and editor for a variety of behind the scenes documentaries for Millennium Films. The first one was for the movie BULLET HEAD (2017), written and directed by Paul Solet and starring Adrien Brody, John Malkovich, and Antonio Banderas. This was followed by the Nicolas Cage starring drama #211 (2018), and then HELLBOY (2019) directed by Neil Marshall and starring David Harbour, Mila Jovovich, and Ian McShane. In 2018 he worked as a trainee assistant director on Rambo V, directed by Adrian Grunberg, starring Sylvester Stallone. Working on set has allowed him to observe and learn directly from highly qualified professionals. Since late 2019 he has been working in the Business Development department in Nu Boyana, working on script breakdowns and budgets. As a freelancer, he has attended the European Film Market in Berlin for two consecutive years, representing an English-language feature screenplay he developed.

Roman has a Bachelor's degree in Film Studies and Video Production from the University of West London.
